They stay of the party here had been made so pleasant that each one of its members wished to be a twin or a triplet so as to be able to multiply her enjoyment. As it was they would need a new unabridged dictionary all filled with new adjectives to express their feelings, as they had already used all the old ones over and over again in the old ones over and over again in describing the impression which the charms of Hawaii made on them.

Mrs. Weatherred further remarked that there were a couple of things which the Journal party expected to work for on its return to the mainland. One of these was to have the volcano set aside as a national park. A railway from Portland to Honolulu vouid also be a nice thing, but as that was impossible, the ladies would boom he plan for a direct steamship line between these two points and to encouruge the development of commerce be-lween the Islands and the northwest.
